A.—Sri B. D. JATTI (Minister for Food).—

(a) Foodgrains are allotted to the Districts taking into consideration the seasonal conditions and consequently the need for the distribution of foodgrains through the agency of Government to the population in the rural areas as also in Cities, Towns and areas with a concentration of labour population and to the other vulnerable sections of the population. The allotments are, of course, subject to the availability of foodgrains under the control of Government.

(b) The Deputy Commissioners of Districts distribute the foodgrains allotted to them keeping the principles indicated in reply to clause (a) in view, among the various areas in the Districts. Foodgrains are distributed through wholesale and retail points ; some of these points are run by Co-operatives and the rest by other agencies.
